Summary report:	Prof Mrunal Pandit conducted a session which is to help students understand the critical roles of verbal and non-verbal communication in conveying messages effectively. Through theoretical instruction and a hands-on activity, students were encouraged to explore how communication can be managed when typical cues are limited or altered. To practically demonstrate the concepts discussed, she introduced an engaging activity involving a robot, a communicator, and a visualizer. In this activity, the robot could not see, the communicator could not see the robot, and the robot could only respond to verbal instructions. Meanwhile, the visualizer could see the robot's actions but was not allowed to speak or give direct instructions.
Outcome:	Students gained an understanding of verbal and non-verbal communication and complexities of communication, particularly the interplay between verbal and non-verbal elements.
